

John Ramsey

John B. Ramsey is a two time New York Times best selling author, former U.S. Navy Lt. Commander, electrical engineer and entrepreneur. He was born and raised in Nebraska, earned a Masters Degree from Michigan State University, served as an Elder in Peachtree Presbyterian Church in Atlanta, Georgia, and was honored as an entrepreneur of the Year in his community after building a successful technology industry business. He is married, the father of five children and has five grandchildren.

John led a private life focused on his family and business until December, 1996 when his youngest daughter, six year old JonBene't, was brutally murdered in Boulder, Colorado. The crime drew chaotic international media attention for years following and cruel public accusations of Ramsey, his wife Patsy, and their 9 year old son by an inexperienced local police department. He weathered injustice than few have experienced with grace, dignity and God's guidance, maintained strong leadership of his family, and strengthened his faith throughout the lengthy ordeal. Twelve years later he and his family were officially cleared by the District Attorney and a written apology was issued for the hardships caused by the careless treatment of his family by the police.

Ramsey is a respected authority in the corporate world and speaks to management groups on "Being Prepared to Deal with a Hostile Media". He is also a inspirational speaker to church congregations on "How to Maintain Hope and Faith through Life's Troubles".
